A Journey to a fictional place ... or is it ?

Dear Reader and Visitor,

My apologies for the late hour—may this message find you well.

What I offer you here is something that began humbly: a handful of voices bubbling up from the comment sections of the Cayman News Service. From those unlikely roots, the Rogues emerged—first as personas, then as stories, and now as full-fledged arcs I hope will captivate you.

The illustrations you'll find within are fragments of that journey. Some made their way into published books. Others did not. But each image, every pose and shadow and smirk, belongs to the living, breathing world of CaymanMunda—a place with its own absurdist gravity. A little island adrift, suspended somewhere between satire and memory.

Its shores are populated by the bold, the broken, the bureaucratic, and the bizarre. And among them: a few Rogues, who—sometimes against their better judgment—have chosen to call it home.

So step in. Enjoy the ride.

It might be a wild one.

A black and white photograph of a woman with long dark hair, wearing a dark, form-fitting, sleeveless dress, walking down a modern staircase. The staircase has dark wooden steps and a dark metal railing. In the background, there is a modern kitchen with a large island, white bar stools, and three black pendant lights. Large windows and glass doors provide a view of an outdoor pool and tropical landscaping. The overall aesthetic is clean, minimalist, and sophisticated.

A detailed, close-up image of Claptrap, a robot character from the video game Borderlands 2. He has a yellow and white striped body, a large glowing blue eye in the center, and several smaller glowing blue eyes on his tentacles. He is surrounded by red, fleshy tentacles and mechanical components. The background is dark and rainy.
